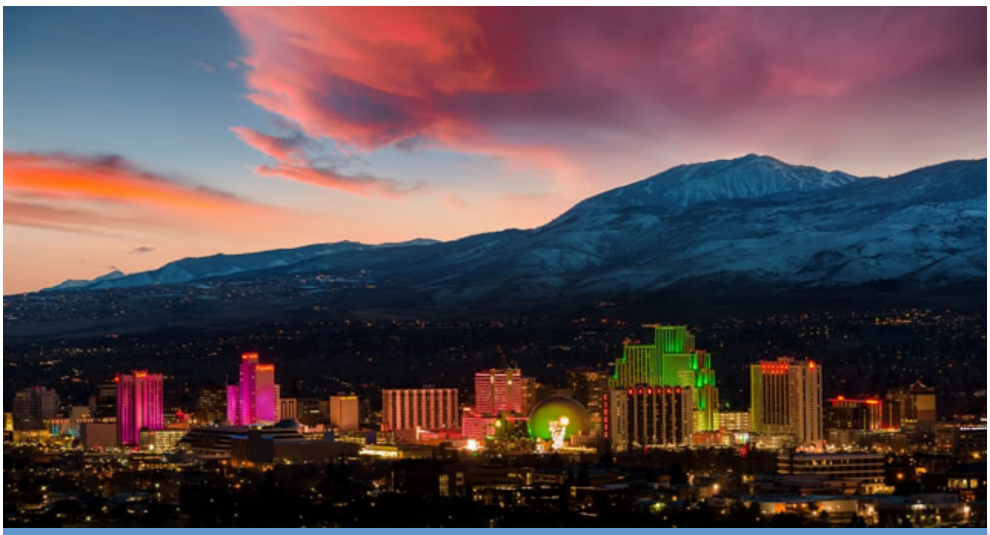
#NRMERA2016: Get Connected!



It really boils down to this: that all life is interrelated. We are all caught in an inescapable network of mutuality, tied into a single garment of destiny. Whatever affects one destiny, affects all indirectly.
— Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

NRMERA 2016 Call for Proposals

Welcome to NRMERA 2016, the 34th conference of the Northern Rocky Mountain Educational Research Association. The theme of this year's conference is "Get Connected!" We are going to explore connectedness in multiple ways. First, the way we work together as researchers in teams over distance and the way we observe and supervise our students has changed, thanks to technology. Next, the way we disseminate our research results and share them not only with other researchers but try to make our work meaningful to the general public and to policymakers also has changed, often through the use of technology such as blogging or Twitter. How do we embrace these changes and move forward into the future and make technology work for us and showcase our work? Early on, I want to see if we can start making a splash - if you don't already have a Twitter account, create one before arriving in Reno. Anytime you hear or see something related to education and/or education research that speaks to you or inspires you, tweet it with the hashtag #NRMERA2016.

Keynote Speaker, Dr. Sara Goldrick-Rab, University of Wisconsin-Madison

Dr. Sara Goldrick-Rab is a Professor of Educational Policy Studies and Sociology at the University of Wisconsin-Madison, and Founding Director at the Wisconsin HOPE Lab. Her research examines the intended and unintended consequences of the college-for-all movement in the United States. She is the recipient of the William T. Grant Foundation's Faculty Scholars Award and the American Educational Research Association's Early Career Award. In fall 2016, the University of Chicago will publish her latest book, Paying the Price: College Costs, Financial Aid, and the Betrayal of the American Dream.
